HISTORICAL REFERENCE

THE CROSSED SWORDS, ABOUT 1722

(E N)

The oldest trademark in Europe, the crossed swords from the coat of arms of the Electorate of Saxony have stood for the quality of Meissen porcelain from about 1722. As part of the Swords collection, this symbol makes its confident, center-stage debut as a design motif. The elegant patterns in gold and gray pay homage to the brand, honoring the rich history of its signet, that has for centuries been synonymous with the highest-quality porcelain and exceptional artistry.

HISTORICAL INFORMATION ON THE MARK OF THE CROSSSED SWORDS

Suggestion by the Inspector of the Royal Manufactory Steinbrück to use the Saxon Electoral Swords as the official mark for porcelain from the Royal Meißen Manufactory.

The so-called "Punktschwertermarke" with a dot between the swords beneath the intersection of the blades (significance not clarified).

Mark of the crossed swords with a star beneath the swords by order of the new Director Count Marcolini, known as the "Marcolini star" (or "Marcolini mark").

Mark of the crossed swords in various designs, including the so-called "Schmierschwerter" (lubricating swords) - with broad, irregular brushstrokes and the "Knopfschwerter" (knob swords) - with broad pommels.

Mark of the crossed swords with dot at the top between the blades by order of the Manufactory Director Max Adolf Pfeiffer, known as the "Pfeiffer dot".

Uniform mark of the crossed swords with only minor modifications.
